How to Check the Quality of the Polo shirt / T-shirt:

Ideally all garments look good when new, the problems may start surfacing once they are used. Therefore, it is very important to understand the quality of the product you are purchasing. Garment laboratory tested is a good option but not always practical especially for small quantities. We suggest some simple ways which may help you to check the quality of the product.

1. Put a sample shirt through a rigorous wash with detergent, flat dry it in the shade & look out for the following:

a. Color Bleeding:

Tie a knot on any part of the t-shirt (preferably a sleeve) with a white cotton fabric and wash it with detergent and further wash it with plain water. Once dried, open the knot and check if any stains of color have come on to the white cotton fabric. If there are no stains then it can be presumed that the garment is color fast. Laboratory test reports normally give the degrees of colour fastness. Level 4-5 is good.

b. Color Fading: You need to check if the colour of the garment after washing looks dull and worn out. This usually occurs if poor quality of pigments have been used for dyeing the garment. Fading also occurs when manufacturers compromise on the processes of manufacturing to save on cost and increase the gsm of a garment by ignoring the process of half bleaching the fabric. Though half bleaching the fabric reduces its GSM, it removes the impurities thus making the fabric dye friendly.

c. Shrinkage: Knitted cotton by nature will always shrink in the initial 1-2 washes. Internationally the acceptable of shrinkage is not beyond 5%. Measuring the garment pre and post wash also helps you understand its shrinkage. If the shrinkage is more than 5% then inform your supplier and demand for a compacted pre-shrunk garment. Compacting is a process which helps reduce the shrinkage. A good quality compacting will ensure the garment does not shrink beyond 3%. Certain styles of knitting such as Honey Comb, Waffle, Drop Needle, Interlock or Pique if not compacted pre-shrunk the fabric may shrink as much as 15%.

d. Possibility of Cotton Balls formation after a few washes: If the fabric feels rough or its color lacks uniformity then there is a very high possibility the yarn used is carded or of a very low quality. On regular usage the garment will develop cotton balls making it very uncomfortable to wear. Some manufacturers use softening agents to conceal the true quality of the fabric. Nevertheless, on closer look you will notice light and dark tones in the fabric color, this occurs as a carded yarn does not absorb the colors evenly. You should insist that the yarn used be "combed", unless your client has asked for a "Semi Combed" yarn to reduce upon the cost of manufacture.

2. Quality of fusing used in the Placket (Button Area of the Polo Shirts):

For polo shirts you need to ensure that a good quality fabric fusing has been used to create the placket. Manufacturers compromise by using paper fusing or low quality starched fabric fusing. After a few of washes the paper fusing disintegrates or the starch washes away causing the entire placket to go out of shape.

3. Quality of Stitching:

Ideally there should be a minimum of 10 stitches per running inch. You also need to check for lat-lock stitching (double needle stitching) on the shoulder, armholes, sleeves, cuff joint, and ribs stitched to the body of the garment for more durability. For polo shirts the cuff seams (from the inside) should be stitched and sealed to ensure the cuff ends do not split open.

4. Size of a T shirt:

Sizes of garments vary depending upon the country you are purchasing from. You should never go by the size mentioned on the label such as M, L, XL. Better try out the garment or specify the size in inches / cms and ask for it to be labeled as per your requirement. The chest size of a knitted garment is measured in width, an inch below the armhole horizontally. Many manufacturers choose to reduce upon the size of their garments to cut on their cost of production. An Inch reduced on the chest would result in 2 inches reduction in the diameter. The length of the garment too needs to be checked. If tucked in the trouser the same should not fall short and keep slipping out. You also need to keep in mind that cotton by nature will always shrink in the first few washes, the same should be kept in mind at the time of planning your size ratio. Internationally a maximum of 5% shrinkage is permissible.

5.Thickness of the Collar & Cuff:

You need to ensure that the knitting of the collar and cuff is light else the collar may curl upwards and the cuffs too may get loose.

6.Quality of Button Holes:

The stitching creathole button hole should be very close to each other and light else, the button hole will loosen.

7.Lycra in the Rib of a Round neck T-shirt:

2-3% Lycra if added to the rib prevents the neck from loosening and ensure it does not go out of shape.

Option of Colors

In all possibility the colour of t-shirt you are looking for will be readily available. Nevertheless, if you do not find your specific tone or colour in our ready options, for large quantities we now undertake colour specific t-shirt orders. Share the Pantone number of the colour you need and we will dye it for you. In our quest to be your complete back end order fulfilment partner besides dyeing colours of your choice we also offer fabric treatments of specific nature such as Anti UV, Anti Microbes, Bio Wash, Fire retardant to our fabric.

Branding Options

In our continuous pursuit to help you service your client better beyond the blanks we also offer branding options of embroidery on Tajima machines, silk screen printing on butterfly machines, Direct to Garment printing on Komit, Sublimation Printing on Epson and also Eco Encryption (final solution to all your branding limitations). In our endeavour to give the best branding results we are only using the best our industry has to offer. Our client servicing team will be happy to help and suggest the best option for your requirement.

For those who are not familiar with Eco Encryption, attached is a logo for you to get a look and feel of the quality of branding:

Why Do T-shirts Fade?

1. Manufacturer Compromising on Process:

Realizing GSM being one of main parameters in comparing quotations, some manufacturers skip an entire process. Ideally after the grey fabric (raw fabric) is knitted, it is semi bleached, a process known as RFD (Ready for dyeing) and then dyed. Bleaching reduces the GSM (Thickness) for eg. A 220ger fabric will almost become a 250 gam this process is skipped. Nevertheless, frthe process of RFD has not been done, in a couple of washes the f-shirt will fade and loose tie sheen.

2. Low Qualities of Dyes Used:

This is yet another reason for garments to fade. Only to reduce upon the price of a product manufactures use low quality dyes or sometimes reduce upon the minimum process time required for dyeing. The colour of the fabric may not bleed when washed in water nevertheless, the moment it is washed with a detergent the colour starts to bleed causing the t-shirt to fade.

3. Use of Strong Detergents:

A detergent cannot differentiate between a colour and a stain, it tries to bleach the colour of the garment, causing it to fade rapidly.

One should avoid using detergents that stake claim only of whiteness.

4. Drying t-shirts in Direct Sunlight:

Sunlight contains ultraviolet (UV) radiation and It is this that causes colours to fade. During summer there is a lot more UV radiation than in Winter. UV radiation + H<sub>2</sub>O (Water) too works as a bleaching agent.

5. Exposure to Sunlight:

Being out in the sun too causes the garments to fade. This is a natural phenomia and nothing much can be done to prevent it.
